MERPHIS COLDS AND LIVERPOOL IMAGINATIOS. Commercial men arrogate to themselves a sort of supremacy in commen sense. They assure the world that they are men of facts and figures, are never led off by imagination, above being living. made victims of groundless fancies, and too much men of the world to allow themselves to be hoodwinked by mere notions. Every man is best acquainted with what he deals in. The "facts and figures" men do not deal in imagination or fancy, therefore they do not know much about those things-they heave them to foolish poets and sentimental novelists. Not knowing much about them, they, in their ignorance, are just the people to be misled by them, and be "toted about" blindly by the very things they so thoroughly despise. We have a curious proof of this, in a fact pointed out to the Liverpool cotton merchants by the Hemphia cotton exchange, in an address we publish in another place. It is there explained that if a bale of phis, by way of New York, the Liverpool merchant will pay one price for it, will pay another. This inexpressible folly the Liverpool merchants ances from well informed gentlemen, that have been perpetrating for many yeurs, and all through a faucya notion-a mere piece of imagination that is unsupported by figures, and most determinately contradicted by

We hope the clear, sensible dent of the Memphis cotton exchange, and those who set with him. will succeed in showing the Liverpool merchants the fact, and delivering them from the famey, so that common subject: "Elsewhere we print a circular addressed by the Memphis cotton exchange to the president of the Liverpool cotton brokers' association, which deserves the attention of those for whom it is intended. There can be no question that the position taken by the Memphis exchange is well grounded. The Liverpool prejudice in favor of New Orleans cotton asjagainst that of Memupon old-time usages, when New Orconditions that gave New Orleans cotton that distinctive preference; and now large quantities of inferior cotton that formerly went to other points goes to New Orleans, while much of the superior staple that once was sent to New Orleans goes to Memphis or other centers of receipt and shipment. Cotton that used to find its way to New Oriesus almost exclusively is now sent to Galveston, Vicksburg, Natchez, Memphis and St. Louis. At any of these places it would bring, to a Liverpool buyer, one-lourth of a cent less than the same cotton would if sold at New Orleans; and, to accommodate the English prejudice, it frequently pays
